

Does Dish Network really need to have another satellite at the same elevation as azimuth as other satellites that they already own? I am not sure what selling this satellite to Dish Network will really prove or do to help the world of satellite television to the rest of the consumer market. It seems to me that with Dish Network buying this dish they may enable 200 more customers to be added, seems like a big waste of time to me!